AFri EXPLODES ARMS MYTHS; WHAT PRICE NEUTRALITY?

The myth that the Republic is uninvolved in the international arms trade has been exploded by a report issued by AFri (Action from Ireland) in late July. "Links: Ireland's links with the arms trade and military industry" reveals that over a dozen companies in the Republic are involved in the manufacture and export of parts for weapons systems. The report is available from AFri, price £5 including postage; AFri, 16 Harcourt Road, Dublin 2. Phone 01 - 478 5100 / 478 5141; Fax 01 478 5142.

Despite clear denials of Irish involvement, e.g. in the recent White Paper on Foreign Policy, AFri's report reveals that armoured vehicle technology, military avionics, radar equipment and gun turret components are among some of the products being made and exported by Irish firms. While these products can be categorised as 'dual use', i.e. they can be used for either civilian or military applications, it is clear that Irish components end up in military use. In one instance, Irish-made radar equipment has ended up in the armed forces of repressive states such as Turkey and Saudi Arabia.

The research shows a particular concentration of hi-tech electronics and aerospace firms in the Cork and Clare/Shannon areas involved in goods with a military end use. Many of the firms named are subsidised by taxpayers' money through the IDA/Industrial Development Authority. The report also details the detrimental long-term industrial and economic effects of reliance on military links although the employment repercussions of disengagement would not at the moment be significant. The report also covers the North where Shorts in Belfast may have increasing reliance on military production following the demise of work for Fokker.

"As a justice, peace and human rights organisation, AFri appeals to the European Union, not to shy away from, but rather to tackle the issue of the Arms trade which wreaks such havoc, especially among the peoples of the Majority World. AFri also calls on the government and the Industrial Development Authority to ensure that Ireland discontinues its involvement in the Arms industry and that the IDA ensure that companies do not engage in military-related production for export. Finally we appeal directly to the companies named in this report and to others who are involved in this area to contemplate the consequences of this lethal trade and refuse to be part of this destructive industry" said Joe Murray, coordinator of AFri.

Meanwhile, Oxfam Ireland and Concern Worldwide have urged the Irish government in its presidency of the EU to support stronger EU involvement in international conflict resolution and prevention. They argue that the Common Foreign and Security Policy has substituted a humanitarian aid programme for political action to deal with the causes of war and conflict; "it has focused excessively in recent years on the perceived threat to Fortress Europe and has largely neglected the global challenges of poverty and conflict". They argue that more determined preventive diplomacy should be combined with a concerted attempt within organisations such as the World Bank and IMF to ensure poverty reduction.

HIROSHIMA, NAGASAKI COMMEMORATIONS

The 51st anniversary of the Hiroshima bombing on 6th August sees the launch of a petition calling for a worldwide ban on nuclear weapons by the year 2000, ("Abolition 2,000") bolstered by a landmark decision by the International Court of Justice in the Hague on 8th July which declared the possession of nuclear weapons illegal. Irish events marking Hiroshima day include:

IN THE LINE OF FIRE

"In the line of fire; Derry, July 1996" is the latest report from the Pat Finucane Centre (PFC); this is the result of over 100 witness statements and interviews regarding events in Derry following Drumcree. A conservative estimate in the report is that there were at least 332 civilian injuries from plastic bullets that weekend. The official RUC statistics show 18 RUC officers injured and they admit that at least 2,500 plastic bullets were fired in Derry; both PFC and CAJ (The Committee on the Administration of Justice), who helped take statements and who will be publishing their own report, would suggest a higher number of plastic bullets were fired but the relevant figure is the number of civilian injuries. The report also covers the death of Dermot McShane, and intimidation. It is available at £2 plus 50 pence postage from; Pat Finucane Centre, 1 West End park, Derry BT48 9JF. Phone 01504 - 268846, fax 268453.

GET THE SPIES TO DO THE WORK

One ludicrous fact from the McLibel (McDonalds) trial in London is that three out of four people present at a London Greenpeace meeting in 1990 were undercover agents of McDonalds; their involvement included distributing the factsheet which McDonalds objected to!
