

Divided societies:

"Bridges go over to the other side"

- and serve both sides equally

Millennium Peace Bridge, Derry/Londonderry/Foyle

'Bridges go over to the other side' has been a sectarian slogan in Northern Ireland in the past, meaning that 'building bridges' between the sides, 'goes over to' or inevitably serves the other side. But no peace or reconciliation is possible without finding ways to communicate and bring people together from across the divides.
